

To the crazy ones.

Here's to the crazy ones.

The parents.

The teachers.

The administrators.

The elementary educators doubling as technology coordinators.

The ones who see educational technology differently.

They're not fond of out of date hardware.

And they have no respect for software feature bloat.

You can email them, chat with them, tweet them,

Facebook them, Hangout or Skype with them.

About the only thing you can't do is ignore them.

Because they change education.

They flip. They blend. They innovate.

They inform. They create. They inspire.

They push the boundary of educational technology forward.

Maybe they have to be crazy.

How else can you stare at a room full of second graders and see answers to the problems of tomorrow?

Or gaze at a social studies map and see an opportunity to teach Photoshop?

I teach technology to these kinds of people.

And while some may simply see them as "those who can't,"

I see genius.

Because the people who are crazy enough to think they can change the world through teaching with technology, are the ones who will.

Teach different.
